MONDAY, MARCH 24, 1890.

The Facts as They Stand. After some delay the Lewiston Journal and the individual who represents it here. seem to have arranged a joint story rela-tive to the prematric publication of the opinion of the court in the Stain and Cromwell case. At first they played at cross purposes, one trying to shift the responsibility for the breach of faith upon the other, but now After taking ample time they evidently have decided to join forces and brazen it out. The Journal indulges in some special plending and fol-lows it with a game of binff characteristic of the trickster. Here is what it says:

Whice put this document, in type and then held it so as to enable the Journal to publish it in advance of its appearance in these columns? Such a suggestion is simply worthy of an imbecile. The WRIG received that document in good faith and The Style.

Having departed from our tisual course in such matters to enter that an explanation, we may make the state that it was then will be such that it was the west of the Associated Press for use on Wednesday after proof important nows like this decision which was an noused by the court on Wednesday. The WHIG is the Bangor agent of the Associated Press and was in duty bound to attend to this matter. The court does not do business at night. Its decision belonged to the afternoop papers and The WHIG ed to the afternoon papers and The Whice ild wrong in attempting to suppress to the Whic's claim that the decision was its private property, is preposterous.

Here again we have a manifestation of the absolute disbonesty of the Journal characteristic of it in its dealings with its contemporaries. But let us compare the onduct of the two papers as regards obligations to the Associated Press. The opinion as we have said was received by us from the court under the pled that it was not to be published until Thursday. The compositors completed their work Tuesday afternoon. Wednesday morning we mailed proof slips to the agent of the New England Associated Press in Boston, Mr. Fletcher, with a note saying the matter was for publication Thursday. At the same time we mailed slips to the Kennebec Journal, Portland Press and Portland Argus with similar instructions. Wednesday night we mailed the slips to the Portland Advantuser. Thus it decision as "its private property," THE WHIG with a due regard for the rights of the Associated Press papers enabled all the morning papers to print it at the same In time we did, which was Thursday morn-very claim it puts forth in ignoring the fact that it was indebted to THE WHIO for its copy convicts it of treachery to the ceived the decision from its correspondent to whom alone it was responsible. Then why did it not enable the other afternoon papers to print it at the same time, instead of cisiming a great news exclusive?" The Associated Press demanded it but the Journal false to its obligations deliberately stole an advantage over its contemporaries and then boasted that it had published the decision ahead of all other papers. No demand was made upon THE WHIG. It was not necessary. We sent the matter forward with the utmost promptness, and had the Lewiston Journal kept good falth, this decision would have appear red the same day in all the Associated Press papers. This is the record of the transaction and upon this statement of facts we court the fullest investigation to the end that it may be authoritatively decided whether THE BANGOR WEIG or the Lewiston Journal. has treated the decision of the Supreme Court as private property.

shows up in this State. To January, 1888, it published the report of Commissions Matthews ahead of time. The Commissioner had fixed upon a day for the publication of his report. The Journal neked for a copy, but refused to accept it under the piedge required. When it appeared other papers THE WHIG addressed a note to Commissioner Matthews who replied that the Journal "stole the report from the bindery." History is repeating itself.

reporter was the first to conthe news of the sudden death of General George Crook to General W. T. Sherman. The bale old veteran was placify sujoying his bevitable eiger, but his head sheek as he removed it to express his deep concern and regret as the death of his old contrade in arms. "George Crook was always a man on spected and trusted him, and be equid bring them around or make them amenable to reason, where every one also falled. During the rebellion Grook had charge of the Second Cavalry division, stationed in Northern Alaban s, and did excellent work. During my fifteen years service as Commander-in-Chief of the Army I had ample opportunity to find out Crook's good raits, and I neve found him anything but man who could be depended on in every emergency."
